

In the end, I think there was a feeling that, because it was a new rights period, it was a chance to change the programme, he said. I think it was their preference that I didn't do Match of the Day for one more year, so they could bring in new people. He continued: But I wouldn't do it again because of all the kerfuffle that followed, and I love the BBC, and I didn't like the damage that it did to the BBC...
